FBOs, MROs, and charter operators lose money on every fuel sale, maintenance invoice, and charter payment to credit card processing fees that are rarely audited and almost never challenged. Merchant Advocate performs a detailed account analysis and negotiates directly with your existing processor — no need to switch processors or disrupt your operations. Since 2006, we've returned over $300M in excess fees to merchants who never knew they were overpaying, from a base of more than $20B in card volume analyzed per quarter. There is no upfront cost — we simply share in the savings we find.

But more than words have driven change—and her career. Rather than simply raising concerns, she pursued a deliberate path into a corporate role where she could influence change, guided by a regional safety manager who supported her along the way.

"I could see from the start that many on the line knew what their job was—and did it very well," she explained. "However, they may not have known the 'why' behind their job and the rationale for rules and regulations. When people see how their contributions fit into the bigger picture, it makes them much more connected to the mission."

That is why, to this day, Myers maintains a direct line to the field, asking her colleagues to speak up with ideas for improvement and enhanced safety.

"Someone may tell me, 'The procedure says this, and I know we follow it, but here's how I think it could be done a little better,'" she explained. "That's how I approached my job—speaking up—and I appreciate hearing suggestions. They only make us stronger and aviation safer."

Emblematic of her investment in the growth and success of others, she has played a key role in the Atlantic Trainer Development Program and Safety Mentorship Program, creating opportunities for employees to grow their skills, strengthen their safety knowledge, and prepare for future leadership.

The same collaborative spirit that drives Myers in the office extends to the industry, reflecting her strong commitment to working with partners in the name of safety. She has served with the NATA Safety Committee, Air Transport Association, Air Charter Safety Foundation, and Atlantic Safety Council, extending her impact across the broader community.

"Audrey has the spirit, knowledge, and commitment that drive her success within Atlantic Aviation and in the broader aviation community," said Curt Castagna, NATA President and CEO. "She has turned safety principles into practical programs that support employees and customers every day. I am looking forward to seeing her continued growth as a true leader in our industry."

Atlantic Aviation HQ is still a long way from Casper for Myers.

"I'm still a small-town girl with no big name, but I'm glad I found the voice to speak up and the courage to take risks, accept failure, and persist through rejection," Myers said. "That's real growth." ■ challenging situations with professionalism and humor, creating positive outcomes for both customers and employees.

"Barbara is an influencer in the best sense of the word," said Curt Castagna, NATA President and CEO. "Her impact is felt every day and in every corner of Banyan and has helped the company define the very best in customer service. Her passion for mentoring others has left a lasting impression on customers and colleagues alike, making her an outstanding representative of the aviation profession."

Like many exceptional professionals focused solely on the customer experience, Bauer shies away from the spotlight. When she learned she would receive the award, she was surprised and, frankly, a little taken aback.

"I thought, 'Oh my God, you're kidding,'" she recalled. "I almost cried because I've been doing this for many, many years. And to be recognized like that is such a great thing. Such a great thing." A
